With 25 years in finance and insurance transformation, I've spent my career solving exactly what the GTG Fund Controller role demands: building reliable financial reporting systems under regulatory pressure, leading teams through complex fund operations, and delivering accuracy at scale.

My last three years as interim Finance Manager at a major insurance group taught me the discipline this role requires. I redesigned the quarterly closing process for a €2B+ portfolio, cutting reporting timelines by 30% while tightening internal controls—the same balance between speed and rigor you'll need managing large open-ended fund reporting. I've worked hands-on with fund accounting, performance attribution, and investor reporting in real asset contexts. I know what it takes to coordinate capital calls, distributions, and cash management when money moves in large chunks and timing matters.

I'm comfortable working both independently and leading finance teams. I've built PMO frameworks from scratch, which translates directly to the oversight and process discipline GTG needs. I speak the language of compliance and internal controls without losing sight of what investors actually care about.

The honest gap: I've built my career in consulting and interim roles. I'm looking now for a permanent executive position where I can own a full operating model long-term, not just fix it and move on. GTG's scale and the GTG's positioning in JPMorgan make this the right fit—a place where financial rigor compounds over years.

I'm ready to discuss how my track record in fund operations and real asset finance directly matches your needs.
