Dear HFG Insurance Recruitment,

I'm writing because your transition programme management role maps directly to what I've spent the last 25 years doing—moving insurance and financial services organisations through complex, high-stakes transformations without breaking the client relationship.

The core of your brief is execution at scale: governance frameworks, multi-million budgets, cross-functional alignment, and client-facing delivery under real pressure. I've done exactly this. At a major European insurer, I led a £12M regulatory reporting transformation spanning 40+ stakeholders across finance, actuariat, and IT. The outcome: governance framework embedded in 6 months, quality controls live, team of 15 junior PMs trained to manage £3M+ sub-programmes independently. At another, I owned onboarding redesign for a new retail acquisition—200+ staff across 3 sites, zero scope creep, delivered 3 weeks ahead.

What matters here: I don't just manage programmes. I build the discipline and the people underneath them. I've inherited chaos, mapped it, and turned it into reproducible process. I've sat across from CFOs and regulators with confidence because the data and controls are real.

There's one genuine gap: you're looking for someone embedded in an organisation; I've spent the last five years as an independent consultant. That's an asset for a transition programme (external credibility, fresh eyes, no internal politics) but not the same as permanent headcount culture. If that's a dealbreaker, I understand. If you see it as useful, I'm genuinely interested in the move.

Happy to talk through specific programme examples or how I'd approach your clients' onboarding challenges.
