Re : Head of Change

Tripling headcount in a year and still holding FCA delegated authority standards together while underwriting, claims and technology all scale at once: that's the kind of stress test most change functions aren't built for yet.

I've spent 25 years inside insurance and finance transformation, and the pattern here is one I know well. At CNP, I rebuilt investment accounting production under Solvency II constraints across 350 billion euros in assets, with governance and controls designed from scratch, delivered in 18 months and on time. That kind of programme only holds together with clear KPIs and a delivery framework the business actually adopts, not just signs off on. At Clearwater Analytics, I ran implementation work fully remote across distributed teams and stakeholders, which is where I built the discipline around async governance, structured check-ins and documentation that makes remote delivery accountable rather than just convenient. And across several AMOA and PMO mandates, I've acted as the bridge between actuarial, IT and operations teams who don't naturally speak the same language, which is exactly the muscle this role needs between underwriting, claims and tech.

I haven't managed a Change function's people development directly, though I've built the frameworks those teams later ran on.

As a contractor who is a non-UK Tax resident, based overseas, IR35 does not apply to me.

Happy to walk through specifics on a call.
