I bring 25 years of insurance transformation experience directly into this role—the intersection of product vision, business alignment, and operational delivery where this maternity contract needs immediate impact.

My strength is orchestrating what you've outlined: translating strategy into product priorities, securing stakeholder buy-in across fragmented teams, and moving from vision to measurable outcomes. I've spent my career in this exact space—Finance, Claims, Risk, IT all pulling different directions—and built the frameworks that make cross-functional delivery stick.

Two concrete examples: At a major European insurer, I redesigned the claims intake process for a P&C book, aligning actuarial reserve requirements, operational capacity, and customer experience metrics. Result: 40% faster claims registration, adopted across five European markets. More recently, I managed a product transformation programme where I owned the business case, secured €2.8M budget alignment across three business units, and established success metrics that drove priority trade-offs when scope pressured timelines.

That experience translates directly here. I understand claims operations deeply—process, systems, regulatory constraints, cost drivers. I know how to build product vision that isn't theoretical; I can pressure-test it against what Claims teams actually need to deliver and what Finance needs to measure ROI.

One honest point: I'm independent, not seeking permanent placement. This 12-month contract suits that reality perfectly. You get someone fully committed for the duration, no part-time attention, and the clarity that my focus stays on delivery, not internal politics.

I'm in Dublin regularly and comfortable in the hybrid model you describe.
