Re : Strategic Project Manager (Finance) - Remote

Turning financial data into decisions that leadership actually acts on, while keeping reporting compliant across jurisdictions, is where most finance transformation programs stall. This role sits directly on that fault line: budgeting, forecasting, variance analysis, and financial modeling, all feeding into a global infrastructure that has to hold up under regulatory scrutiny.

At CNP Assurances, I rebuilt investment accounting production under Solvency II constraints, covering 350 billion euros in assets under management, delivered in 18 months, on schedule. That meant designing financial models to test process feasibility before rollout, not after. On a separate mandate, I led a general ledger migration and cleared a multi-year backlog of suspense accounts, coordinating finance, actuarial, and IT teams who had never worked from the same data set. The result was a closing process that finance leadership could trust without re-checking every line, which is the same standard this role asks for in linking financial strategy to execution.

My regulatory grounding is IFRS 17, IFRS 9, and Solvency II, built in French and international insurance groups. I have not worked inside a pure technology or internet company's finance function, so the industry context here would be new, though the mechanics of financial planning, ERP systems, and cross-functional delivery are not.

Worth a 30-minute call to see if the fit works both ways.
