Dear Hiring Manager,

I bring 25 years of hands-on finance transformation experience in insurance and banking, with a track record delivering complex operating model redesigns and regulatory reporting overhauls in environments where technical rigour, stakeholder alignment, and execution discipline matter most.

Over the past decade, I've led finance transformation workstreams for tier-one financial services firms —designing control frameworks, optimising process architectures, and driving system implementations across fragmented organisational structures. Most recently, I partnered with a major European insurer's CFO office to redesign their monthly closing cycle, reducing cycle time by 35% while embedding tighter controls across Finance and Actuariat teams. That engagement required navigating competing priorities across Finance, IT, Risk and Regulatory functions—precisely the stakeholder complexity your role demands.

What sets my approach: I don't just map processes or recommend tools. I work alongside senior partners to translate business intent into executable designs, then stay through delivery to ensure quality and manage dependencies. I mentor junior colleagues rigorously and take responsibility for team output—not just my own workstream.

I'm currently consulting independently through my own advisory firm. Moving into a hands-on Manager role at KPMG appeals because it combines strategic scope with the operational delivery I thrive on, and because your Financial Services practice aligns exactly with where I've built deepest expertise. I'm comfortable with the travel cadence, and I've worked across UK and European regulatory environments.

The honest gap: I've operated as a self-directed consultant, not within a traditional hierarchy. That's worth discussing directly—I work best with clarity on scope and stakeholder expectations, which senior leadership typically provides well.

I'd welcome a conversation about how my specific transformation experience translates to KPMG's client work.

Best regards,

Xavier Robitaille
