Re : Strategic Project Manager (Finance) - Remote

Modernizing financial infrastructure while running high-stakes projects through budgeting, forecasting, and ROI modeling is a demanding brief, especially when it has to hold up against regulatory scrutiny at the same time. That combination, financial rigor plus cross-functional delivery, is where I've spent the last 25 years.

I've built financial models for investment accounting under IFRS 9, covering ECL calculation, amortized cost, and asset classification, which is the same discipline this role needs when evaluating project feasibility and ROI. As PMO lead on insurance finance transformation programs, I coordinated actuarial, IT, finance, and risk teams to redesign month-end closing and controls, resolving reconciliation bottlenecks that had been stalling fast-close targets. I've also led SimCorp Dimension and Clearwater Analytics implementations end to end, from design through production, keeping financial reporting aligned with Solvency II and IFRS 17 while the underlying systems changed underneath the teams using them.

One honest gap: my 25 years run almost entirely through insurance and asset management, not tech-sector finance operations. The financial modeling, ERP work, and stakeholder management transfer directly; the industry context would be new.

Worth a 30-minute call to see if the fit works both ways?
