Re : Global Project Management Director

Standardizing project management frameworks across regions while keeping investment, technology, and operational priorities aligned is a governance problem before it's a scheduling one. That's the part of this role that matches how I've spent the last 25 years working.

At a major French insurer, I rebuilt investment accounting production under Solvency II constraints: 350 billion euros in assets, an 18-month program, delivered on time, with budget tracking and milestone reporting built from scratch because none existed. On a separate mandate, I led the SimCorp Dimension and Clearwater Analytics implementations end to end, from scoping through UAT, coordinating finance, IT, and middle office teams across time zones with no shared vocabulary at the start. I also designed and ran the closing process redesign that cut fast-close cycle time while adding control points, which meant negotiating trade-offs directly with senior stakeholders rather than just documenting them.

I haven't run programs inside a systematic macro or long/short equities trading platform specifically. My depth is on the investment accounting, regulatory, and operational side of asset management, not on strategy execution itself.

Happy to walk through how the Solvency II program or the systems migrations would translate to your project portfolio, if useful.
