

Dear Hiring Manager,

I bring 25 years of pure insurance and finance experience—rare in the market. What RSM needs here is someone who can navigate the three-way complexity you face: technical rigour on accounting and ERP implementation, regulatory pressure (Solvency II, IFRS 17), and the human work of moving teams through transformation. That's exactly where I've added most value.

Over the past decade, I've led finance transformation programmes across major insurers. Most recently, I redesigned closing processes for a €2B+ portfolio insurer—cut close time by 35%, eliminated manual controls, rebuilt the control framework for IFRS 17 compliance. Before that, I acted as interim Finance Manager for a mutual insurer through a full operating model overhaul: designed new processes, mapped ERP configuration (SAP, Power BI), coached finance leadership through the shift. Both clients retained me across multiple phases because the work stuck.

I'm fluent in the technical foundation you mention—SAP, Oracle, regulatory reporting—but my real skill is bridging the gap between what accountants need, what systems can deliver, and what busy executives actually need to decide. I've managed senior stakeholder groups (CFOs, actuaries, IT) through disagreement to aligned action. That matters in assurance transformation.

The honest gap: I've been independent for a decade. I've chosen client work that let me lead, shape scope, and exit cleanly. A permanent role at RSM means committing differently—staying through the harder second phase where the real ROI happens. I'm ready for that, but we should both be clear about it.

I'd like to talk about how you're thinking about the advisory team's role in this mandate—whether it's advisory-led delivery or embedded day-to-day. That shapes fit.

Available to connect this week.

Best regards,
Xavier Robitaille
