Dear Deutsche Börse Group Hiring Team,

I'm writing to express my interest in the Operations Transformation Manager role for International Securities Issuance. My 25 years in finance and insurance — focused specifically on operational transformation, regulatory complexity, and delivery under pressure — align directly with what you're building in your Centre of Competence.

What you need is someone who can bridge operations and technology without losing sight of regulatory reality. I've done this repeatedly. Most recently, I redesigned financial close processes for a major insurer, reducing cycle time by 40% while embedding new control frameworks that satisfied both internal audit and regulatory requirements. The work required the same skill set your posting describes: defining how work gets done, not doing it myself, and ensuring automation actually reflects operational constraints.

I've led similar transformation efforts in securities operations environments — designing straight-through processing workflows, managing automation pipelines, and serving as the operational voice in technology projects. I understand the intersection where your CoC operates: where business, IT, and compliance have to move together or they move nowhere.

One thing to flag honestly: I've worked primarily as an independent consultant these past several years. I'm ready to move into a permanent role where I can embed deeper into an organization and see transformation through to sustained operational excellence. Deutsche Börse's scale and regulatory environment are exactly where I want that commitment.

I'm based in France but open to Luxembourg. Happy to discuss how my experience translates to the specific mandates you've outlined for the Delivery Hub and the automation pipeline.

Best,

Xavier Robitaille
