I bring 25 years of insurance and finance expertise—25 years in this industry alone—directly into the CFO Office and regulatory compliance space where Deloitte's Financial Services clients operate. That's the core value here: I don't learn insurance governance and data architecture. I've built it, redesigned it, and fixed it under pressure.

What I do: I sit at the intersection of Finance, Actuariat, IT, and Risk where most consulting struggles. Process design, closing frameworks, regulatory reporting infrastructure, data governance models—these aren't theoretical exercises for me. On a recent mandate at a mid-sized insurer, I led the redesign of their financial close process across three entities, cut the cycle time by 35%, and embedded controls that satisfied both internal audit and external compliance reviews. On another, I architected the data model and governance structure for a Solvency II reporting overhaul. I deliver the technical depth and the ability to translate it upward to boards and downward to execution teams.

Deloitte's role here matters. You're supporting insurers through digital transformation and tightening regulatory pressure simultaneously. You need someone who understands both the legacy constraints and the modern architecture they're moving toward. That's my wheelhouse.

One real gap: I've been independent and embedded in client teams since 2019. CDI environments move differently. I'm genuinely interested in seeing how that rhythm changes my thinking, and I'm ready for it.

I'd welcome a 30-minute call to discuss a specific mandate or two where my background maps directly to your client needs.
