Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm a senior finance consultant with 25 years in insurance, and I've spent the last decade managing complex group reporting and consolidation processes across multi-entity structures—exactly what this role demands.

What makes me useful here: I've coordinated quarterly and year-end closes for insurance groups operating across multiple jurisdictions and currencies. I'm qualified (French expert-comptable equivalent to ACA), fluent in IFRS consolidation, and have run the technical side of group reporting for organisations with 50+ legal entities. I've built and maintained consolidation controls, led external audit engagement, and delivered regulatory packs under tight deadlines. I'm also comfortable in Excel at the level this role requires, and I've worked in environments where data integrity and reconciliation discipline separate good reporting from poor.

Most recently, I've worked as an interim Finance Manager and business analyst in insurance transformation programmes—the kind of delivery-focused, stakeholder-heavy work that teaches you to get it right the first time and communicate clearly upward.

One thing to note: I've been freelance/interim for the last several years by design. This 12-month FTC is attractive because it's structured project work with clear accountability and finite scope—exactly how I work best. I'm not looking to stay freelance indefinitely; I'm open to the right permanent role, but I won't pretend otherwise.

I'm based in France currently, but London is straightforward for me, and I'm ready to move for the right assignment.

Let's talk about whether my experience matches what you need.

Best,

Xavier Robitaille
