I'm a regulatory and financial reporting specialist with 25 years in insurance and finance. Over the past decade, I've spent significant time in Lloyd's syndicate environments—preparing accurate regulatory returns, strengthening controls, and translating complex reporting requirements into sustainable processes. This role feels like a natural fit for what I do best: delivering compliance-critical outputs under tight timelines while building operational durability.

My most recent work centered on regulatory reporting transformation for a mid-sized Lloyd's operation where I owned the full cycle: controls design, data integrity validation, return substantiation, and analytical review protocols. We reduced month-end close variance by 35% and embedded automated controls that stuck post-engagement. I learned the specific rhythms of Lloyd's timetables, the relationship dynamics between syndicates and the market, and how to challenge financial data integrity without creating friction.

I work as a senior independent consultant, which means I'm used to stepping into unfamiliar teams quickly and adding value without ramp-up overhead. I'm also explicit about scope: I understand you need someone for 12 months, and I'm comfortable with that boundary. I won't position this as a backdoor to permanent placement.

What I won't claim is deep product-level insurance knowledge across all syndicate lines—that's not my lane. I operate at the reporting and controls layer, which is where I deliver the most value.

I'm based in Europe and available to move to London for this assignment. Happy to discuss how my specific Lloyd's experience aligns with Syndicate 2001's priorities.
