With 25 years in finance and insurance transformation, I bring exactly what Deloitte's Finance Transformation team needs: deep technical expertise combined with the discipline to deliver complex initiatives on time.

My recent work demonstrates this fit. At a major French insurer, I led the redesign of their entire closing process—mapping workflows, implementing ERP controls, and retraining 40+ finance staff across three locations. The result: 35% reduction in close cycle time and a SOX-compliant control framework adopted within four months. Earlier, I managed PMO governance for a €8M regulatory reporting platform upgrade, keeping 12 work streams aligned and delivering on schedule despite major stakeholder conflict between Finance and Compliance.

What separates me from typical consultants: I don't just design solutions and hand them off. I stay embedded during implementation, anticipate where designs break in practice, and adjust. I speak finance deeply—Solvency II, IFRS, statutory reporting—which means I translate business requirements accurately and avoid the usual gap between what's promised and what works operationally.

I'm based in France and fully available for hybrid work in Milan. The Milan location works well for me; I've worked across Europe regularly.

One honest note: I've worked as an independent consultant the past five years, not within a corporate structure. That's actually an advantage for this role—I'm accustomed to moving quickly, owning delivery, and adapting to different client cultures. But if the role requires someone in a traditional consulting firm track, I understand.

I'm interested in exploring this. My calendar is open; the easiest path is a 30-minute call.
