I bring 25 years of financial services expertise directly into the strategic challenges SAP Pioneer solves —and I understand the gap between innovative technology and how it actually lands in a CFO's office or an insurance operations team.

As an independent consultant, I've spent the last decade designing and delivering transformation programs at the intersection of business and IT. On a regulatory reporting overhaul for a €40B insurance group, I led the strategic blueprint and managed the cross-functional delivery—translating actuarial, finance, and compliance requirements into a cloud-first operating model that cut reporting cycles by 35%. Earlier, I shaped PMO governance and business case development for a multinational bank's core system migration, working directly with C-suite stakeholders to articulate value and manage execution risk across three countries.

What matters here: I don't just advise on strategy. I own delivery. I've built the roadmaps, staffed the teams, managed the budget pressure, and sat through the board conversations when complexity showed up. That credibility at senior level comes from having lived both sides—what finance and insurance executives actually need, and what IT can realistically build.

The shift to a permanent role at SAP Pioneer would be a natural move. I've always been drawn to organizations where technology and deep industry knowledge drive real change. The difference now is doing it from inside, with a team, at scale.

I'm based in the Paris region and open to Germany—the work itself is what moves me.

Let's talk.
