Dear Hiring Manager,

I bring 25 years of insurance expertise directly into this role. My background spans business process redesign, regulatory transformation, and PMO delivery—exactly the foundation needed to translate complex insurance requirements into Guidewire specifications and drive their implementation.

What matters here: I've spent two decades at the intersection of business complexity and technical execution. I've mapped core insurance workflows for major carriers, led process modernization across finance and operations, and managed delivery teams through high-stakes transformations. I know insurance language—actuarial constraints, regulatory reporting, claims workflows—and I can speak fluently with both business stakeholders and technical teams without losing precision in translation.

Concrete example: I recently redesigned underwriting and claims operations for a mid-sized insurer, documenting 80+ business processes, identifying 12 system capability gaps, and building detailed functional specifications that fed directly into a platform migration. The work required deep process knowledge, stakeholder alignment across silos, and the discipline to move from ambiguity to executable design. That's the work this Senior Business Analyst role demands.

One honest point: I've worked as an independent consultant for the past three years. I'm genuinely interested in returning to a structured environment at NTT DATA because your scale—working across the Fortune Global 100 in insurance—offers the complexity and growth I'm looking for. I value the infrastructure, the exposure to multiple implementations, and the chance to build something sustainable rather than jumping between engagements.

I'd welcome a conversation about how I can accelerate your Guidewire projects from day one.

Best regards,

Xavier Robitaille
