I bring 25 years of insurance and finance delivery experience to complex, high-stakes transformations —exactly what this Data Workstream role demands. I've spent my career operating at the intersection of finance, technology, and regulatory constraints, which is where programmes either succeed or unravel. This role sits squarely in that space.

What I do well: establish clear delivery discipline across fragmented teams, maintain visibility of progress and dependencies without losing sight of outcomes, and challenge constructively when quality or commitments slip. I've led integrated delivery plans across multiple workstreams in regulated environments where milestones are non-negotiable and governance is real, not ceremonial.

Recent example: I managed finance transformation delivery for a major insurer where I coordinated activity across data, systems, and business teams over an 18-month programme. I built the integrated plan, maintained the RAID log with rigour, and produced outcome-focused reporting that made trade-offs visible to senior stakeholders. The programme delivered on time and the finance team actually used the new platform—which sounds obvious but rarely happens.

The honest part: I'm a freelance consultant, not looking for permanent employment. I deliver best on fixed-term assignments where the scope is clear and the endpoint is defined. That matches your timeline (June into early 2027) and the programme structure you've described.

I'm based in France but comfortable with London hybrid. I can start ASAP and I'm direct about what I see—blockers, dependency issues, quality slippage—which some teams find refreshing and others find uncomfortable. The good ones want both.
