

Dear Hiring Manager,

I bring 25 years of finance and insurance transformation expertise directly into your transformation mandate. Where zeb designs strategy and operating models, I execute them—bridging the gap between elegant frameworks and real organizational change, particularly when regulatory constraints and technical debt complicate the picture.

My fit is specific. I've redesigned finance operating models and PMO governance for complex insurance and banking environments. One example: leading a €2M regulatory reporting transformation for a mid-sized insurer, rebuilding process design and controls while keeping a distributed team aligned across Finance, IT, and Risk. Another: serving as interim CFO office lead during a critical closing redesign, where judgment about what to fix first, not just what to fix, made the difference between timeline success and drift.

What I add to your team: I translate between the languages your clients actually speak. Technical rigor, yes. But also the ability to read organizational dysfunction, push back on solutions that look clean but won't stick, and move groups toward decisions they believe in rather than ones they resent. Workshops and Design Thinking methodologies work better when someone in the room has seen what happens when change designs meet reality.

I'm built for this role's trajectory—starting with scoping and hands-on project leadership, moving into client relationship ownership and methodology development. The Hamburger base and senior consultant scope fit my current ambition.

One fair note: I've worked as an independent consultant for the past few years. I'm genuinely interested in embedding with an organization again where the work compounds. That said, I come ready to contribute immediately, not learn the model.

I'd welcome a conversation about how my background maps to your current client challenges.

Best regards,
