Dear zeb consulting team,

I'm writing because your Finance & Controlling mandate in insurance aligns exactly with where I've spent 25 years building depth—and it's rare to find a role that values both technical rigour and the ability to move complex programmes forward.

What you're solving for: You need someone who speaks fluent IFRS/HGB, understands insurance operating models, and can actually lead delivery in finance transformation. Most consultants have one or two of these. The gap I fill is having all three, plus the PMO discipline to make it stick.

Proof: I spent the last five years as interim Finance Manager and CFO Office advisor across three major European insurers—Allianz, AXA, and others. One example: I led a regulatory reporting redesign for a €4B premium carrier (HGB consolidation, monthly close compression from 15 to 8 days, 40% cost reduction in the finance function). That meant moving through controlling frameworks, building new KPI dashboards, aligning IT and finance stakeholders who'd never agreed on anything, and delivering on a fixed timeline. Same profile you need for your clients.

The honest part: I've been freelance for three years, running Expert Zone Advisory. You're hiring for CDI. I'm serious about returning to a structured role where I can build something over time and mentor your teams—but I want to be clear about that shift rather than pretend it's not a change.

What interests me most is your emphasis on rechnungswesen/IFRS depth and cost efficiency work. That's where I add the most impact. I'd welcome a conversation to explore whether this role makes sense for both of us.

Best regards,
Xavier Robitaille
