I'm drawn to this role because VIG needs someone who can hold together complex financial consolidation, regulatory reporting, and cross-functional delivery simultaneously—and that's exactly where I've built my track record.

Over 25 years in insurance and finance, I've spent the last decade as an interim finance manager and PMO lead on transformation programmes where technical depth and stakeholder alignment made the difference. At a pan-European insurer, I redesigned the month-end closing process across 12 entities, cutting consolidation time by 40% and strengthening controls for regulatory submissions. I've also led IFRS transition projects, managed quarterly reporting through enforcement procedures, and coordinated between Group Finance, local entities, and external auditors—the exact ecosystem you're describing.

What matters here is that I don't just execute reporting mechanics. I help teams understand the "why" behind the numbers, translate regulatory complexity into usable formats for management and boards, and anticipate where process or system gaps create risk. That background in both technical accounting and organisational problem-solving fits well with a deputy head role where you're both doing the work and enabling others to do theirs better.

The honest gap: I've worked as a consultant and interim leader, not in a permanent corporate role recently. That said, I thrive in structured, mission-driven environments with clear accountability—which Vienna's operating model seems to offer. I'm also genuinely interested in Vienna as a base for the next phase of my career.

I'd welcome a conversation about how my experience navigating complexity, stakeholder dynamics, and delivery pressure translates to embedding myself in your team and supporting the head of Group Finance effectively.
