Dear Tokio Marine HCC Hiring Team,

I'm applying for the Senior External Reporting Manager role because my background maps directly to what you need: 25 years in insurance finance, with deep expertise in statutory reporting, regulatory compliance, and the operational discipline required to deliver accurate accounts under tight timelines.

Over the past decade, I've worked extensively on external reporting frameworks for insurance groups. Most recently, I led a consolidated reporting redesign for a specialty insurer managing multiple legal entities across geographies—similar to your HCCI Plc consolidation setup. I built the analytical review process, reconciled GAAP variances across entities, and cut month-end close time by 35% while strengthening audit readiness. I've also coordinated with external auditors on annual statutory accounts and managed forward-looking impact assessments when regulatory reporting requirements changed mid-year.

What I bring beyond technical competence: I design systems that scale. I embed continuous improvement into teams rather than patching problems. I communicate variance stories to boards and CFOs in language they actually understand. And I get the difference between compliance and insight—your role clearly demands both.

One honest note: I've worked primarily as an interim consultant and senior advisor. I'm now looking to anchor into a permanent role where I can build something, develop a team culture, and stay through the cycles rather than hand off at project end. This role appeals to me precisely because it's about embedding rigor and ownership, not just executing one-off deliverables.

I'm based in France but can relocate to London or work a hybrid pattern immediately. Happy to discuss how my experience with your specific reporting stack—UK solo and consolidated accounts, CFO quarterly reporting, audit coordination—translates into day-one value.

Best,

Xavier Robitaille
