I'm a senior finance consultant with 25 years in insurance and banking—exactly the domain where SAP Finance & Risk transformations live. I've spent my career building the bridges between business requirements and complex system deployments, which is precisely what this role demands.

Over the past decade, I've led regulatory reporting redesigns and process optimization programs across European financial institutions. One recent engagement involved restructuring a €2B insurance group's closing process—tightening controls, automating manual workflows, and ensuring Solvency II compliance in parallel. Another focused on validating SAP S/4HANA finance configurations for a multinational insurer, working across seven country entities to reconcile local requirements with global architecture. I know the weight of getting this right, and I know how to move quickly without cutting corners.

I'm currently independent through my consulting entity, which gives me flexibility to engage fully on demanding transformation programs. The remote structure suits how I work—focused delivery, clear communication with distributed teams, and the ability to travel for critical workshops when needed.

What I bring beyond technical depth is judgment. I've navigated enough regulatory complexity, stakeholder politics, and execution pressure to know when to push on process optimization and when to accept pragmatic trade-offs. Finance and Risk functions need that clarity, especially in international rollouts where competing priorities create real tension.
