I'm a senior consultant with 25 years in insurance and finance—the exact sector where MACIF operates. I've spent my career bridging the gap between what business needs and what delivery teams actually execute, which is precisely what a multi-domain project lead does every day.

My last three years have focused on transformation programs: I've redesigned operating models for finance teams, led regulatory reporting overhauls, and managed complex stakeholder alignment across actuarial, IT, and operations functions. That experience taught me how to frame ambitions into executable roadmaps and keep cross-functional teams moving forward when priorities clash.

One concrete example: I led a process redesign and control framework for a €2M+ regulatory reporting scope across three countries. It involved untangling 18 months of work into 6-month phases, reshaping team structures, and securing buy-in from both CFO and compliance teams. The result was a 40% faster closing cycle and a repeatable model. That's the kind of orchestration this role asks for.

There's one honest thing to mention: I've worked freelance and in consulting roles, not permanent positions. But I'm looking to anchor into an organization where I can build something longer-term with a team. MACIF's mutualist model and focus on sustainable expertise development—that resonates. I want to move away from project-to-project firefighting and into deeper ownership.

I'd welcome a conversation about how my experience translates to your multi-domain pipeline and what you need from someone stepping into this role. I'm available for a call at your convenience.
