I've spent 25 years building insurance transformation programmes—never worked outside the sector, which means I understand the friction points you're trying to solve.

NP Group's mandate sits exactly where I add most value: I've led end-to-end operating model redesigns for insurers, rebuilt process architectures across underwriting and claims, and managed the governance side of large-scale tech-enabled change. At Expert Zone Advisory, I've designed target operating models for mid-market insurers facing modernisation pressures; I've also run the PMO and stakeholder alignment for a €40M+ regulatory compliance programme that touched Finance, Actuarial, and Operations simultaneously.

That last one matters because it's not just about process maps or automation roadmaps—it's about getting CFOs, underwriting heads, and CIOs to move together. I work fluently in both languages: the operational detail and the executive narrative.

One honest gap: I'm structured as an independent consultant. If you need someone embedded long-term in a CDI, that's a different conversation. But if you're looking for someone who can walk into a complex insurance environment, read the stakeholder dynamics in week one, and start moving the needle on transformation delivery by week three, I move quickly.

I'm based in Brussels already, speak French and English daily, and have the insurance operating model knowledge that usually takes years to build.

Let's talk about what you're actually trying to move.
