I bring 25 years of insurance and finance experience—the last decade focused on programme delivery, PMO governance, and complex stakeholder alignment across Finance, Actuariat, IT, and Operations. Your role description matches precisely where I add most value: bridging technical rigour with delivery discipline in high-visibility transformations.

My recent work includes leading a €12M regulatory reporting platform redesign for a major European insurer—full scope definition, resource allocation across seven teams, budget governance, and delivery to a hard deadline. I've also owned a complete finance operating model redesign (headcount planning, process mapping, controls framework), where the critical skill was keeping Finance, Risk, and IT synchronized without losing pace. These aren't theoretical capabilities; they're embedded in how I work.

I understand programme delivery isn't just tracking tasks. It's clarity on scope, proactive resource arbitration, honest status reporting, and knowing when to escalate versus solve. Your emphasis on "supported, ensuring all key elements are tracked, reported and managed to a high standard" resonates—that's where discipline separates success from slippage.

One transparency note: I'm currently freelance through Expert Zone Advisory. I thrive in both structures. If a CDI is your preference, I'm genuinely open to that conversation. What matters to me is the complexity of the work and whether the environment actually supports the bold, curious culture you describe.

I'm in Manchester frequently and available for a conversation. You'll find my work history and detail at linkedin.com/in/xrobitaille, and I can send a full CV immediately.

Let's talk about whether this role is the fit we both sense it might be.

Best,
Xavier Robitaille
