I'm a senior finance consultant with 25 years in insurance and Lloyd's-adjacent markets. I've spent the last decade building and rebuilding finance functions through transformation cycles—exactly what your client is tackling now.

My value here is specific: I've led operational redesigns in GAAP/IFRS reporting, rebuilt regulatory and compliance reporting frameworks for complex insurance businesses, and worked directly with IT and business teams to drive technology upgrades that actually stick. I'm not uncomfortable challenging existing practices or pushing on what "we've always done." I've done it repeatedly, and it lands better when someone knows the regulatory grid and the operational math underneath.

On Lloyd's directly: I've advised on Lloyd's platform reporting requirements and syndicate-level financials, enough to know the constraints and where digital transformation actually gains traction versus where it creates friction. I understand the specific reporting layer this role owns.

Two concrete examples. I led a three-year finance operating model redesign for a mid-cap insurance group—rebuilt the closing calendar, consolidated five reporting streams into one source of truth, and cut month-end close time by 40%. More recently, I guided a CFO office through a multi-year regulatory reporting programme where the win wasn't just compliance; it was building a team and architecture that could absorb change without breaking.

I'm currently independent, which means I move fast and I don't carry organizational drag. The honest gap: I'm not hunting for a 12-month contract here. If this is a genuine two-to-three-year build where the role stays, that shifts things for me toward a proper employment conversation.

Happy to talk through your client's specific transition priorities and where the biggest friction points sit. I'll be direct about what I can move and what genuinely takes time.
