Re : Implementation Project Manager – Remote-First

Coordinating 16 banks and two acquirers around a single onboarding plan for Wero is a stakeholder problem before it's a technical one. Getting a new member from kickoff to go-live means aligning product, legal, engineering and marketing on the same timeline, and making sure nobody's blocked waiting on someone else's decision. That's the kind of delivery work I've built my career on.

At CNP, I rebuilt the investment accounting production line under Solvency II constraints: 350 billion euros in assets, 18 months, delivered on schedule, with actuarial, IT and finance all reporting into the same governance structure I designed. On a separate mandate, I ran the acceptance testing (UAT) for a GL migration where the real risk wasn't the technical cutover, it was getting 6 business teams to sign off on the same data before go-live without slipping the date. Both cases required the same thing this role needs: a single project owner who tracks KPIs, flags risk early, and keeps a steering committee moving instead of stalling on unresolved details.

I've worked remote-first since my time at Clearwater Analytics, coordinating with distributed teams across time zones on tooling and reporting cadence, so a pan-European, hybrid setup with quarterly meetings is familiar territory, not an adjustment.

Happy to walk through how this maps to EPI's onboarding pipeline on a call.
