I'm a transformation consultant with 25 years in insurance and finance. I've spent the last decade aligning business strategy with delivery—exactly what this Claims Transformation Manager role demands.

My last three assignments sit directly in your wheelhouse. At a major European insurer, I shaped product vision for a claims digital transformation, working across actuarial, operations, and IT to define success metrics and harmonize legacy platforms. Budget responsibility: €2.8M over 18 months. The result was a unified product roadmap that cut processing time by 35% and reduced handoffs by half. Before that, I led the business case and stakeholder alignment for a self-serve portal redesign—the kind of work that moves insurers from reactive to customer-centric models.

What I bring: I'm fluent in both business language and technical constraints. I don't build visions in isolation. I coordinate across silos—making sure your product managers, claims operations, and digital teams actually speak the same language about priorities. I've managed tactical budgets under regulatory scrutiny and shaped value propositions that survived CFO pressure. I'm also comfortable saying when scope won't fit timeline or when technical debt needs to come first.

One note: I'm a freelance consultant. This 12-month maternity contract suits me well—predictable, focused, time-bound. I'm not looking to convert to permanent; I'm looking to deliver something real and move on.
