Dear AXA Partners Hiring Team,

I'm drawn to the Global Finance Tools Business Owner role because it sits precisely where my last 25 years of delivery happen: at the intersection of finance transformation, regulatory constraint, and operational complexity.

Your description—defining roadmap, harmonizing systems across entities, translating business requirements into functional specs, managing large-scale implementations—aligns with how I've spent the last decade. At Allianz, I led the redesign of the closing cycle across 12 entities, moving from fragmented local processes to a unified SAP-based model. That meant owning both the business case (€2.8M savings identified, 15% cycle time reduction) and the hard part: stakeholder alignment across Finance, IT, Actuariat, and Risk. I've also built governance frameworks and process standards that stuck—not because they were theoretically sound, but because I involved the people who had to live with them.

More recently, as an independent consultant, I've worked as interim Finance Manager and AMOA lead on transformation programs in insurance and asset management. I'm comfortable in the ambiguity of large programs—defining scope when it's unclear, prioritizing demands when everything feels urgent, managing vendors and internal stakeholders when incentives don't naturally align.

One honest thing: I've been independent for several years. The role asks for someone embedded and focused. I'm genuinely ready for that structure again. What I bring is deep domain knowledge, delivery discipline, and the ability to hold complexity without losing sight of what matters to the business.

I'd welcome a conversation about how my background maps to your roadmap priorities—especially around entity harmonization and system modernization strategy.
