I bring 25 years of insurance and finance expertise—exactly what Synpulse needs in this role. My edge isn't theoretical. I've lived the transformation challenges your P&C, Life, and Health clients face: navigating regulatory complexity, redesigning operating models, and executing change when stakes are high.

Most recently, I led a €2M+ digital transformation program for a mid-market insurer, bridging actuarial requirements, IT architecture, and finance operations. The result: 40% faster premium processing and a compliance-ready platform launched on time. Before that, I managed a multi-stakeholder regulatory reporting overhaul that reduced month-end closing from 8 days to 3, freeing the CFO office to focus on strategy.

What makes me effective: I'm not a pure strategist or pure technologist. I sit at the intersection—which is exactly where your brief points. I understand insurance IT landscapes because I've built them. I speak the language of operations, risk, and finance because I've solved real problems there. I ask the right diagnostic questions before proposing solutions, and I stay hands-on through delivery because theory fails when timelines tighten.

I should be direct about one thing: I've worked as an independent consultant for the past decade. The move to a structured consultancy appeals precisely because Synpulse's model—collaborative teams, diverse geographies, focus on impact—matches how I work best. I'm looking to bring my depth into a platform where I can amplify it across more complex, multi-office engagements.

I'm based in France and excited about Zurich. I'm ready to discuss how we can build client success from day one.
