

Dear Aon Hiring Team,

I'm writing to express my interest in the Global Strategy & Execution Manager role in London. I bring 25 years of insurance and financial services experience—entirely within these sectors—with a proven track record turning strategic priorities into measurable business outcomes through disciplined execution and cross-functional alignment.

My value proposition here is straightforward: I excel where strategy meets complexity. I've spent two decades as a senior consultant helping insurance firms redesign operating models, rebuild finance functions, and deliver large-scale transformation programmes. I understand the specific tensions you face—regulatory constraints, actuarial requirements, legacy systems, competing stakeholder priorities. I'm comfortable working in that pressure zone where clarity and execution discipline determine success.

Two examples illustrate the fit. First, I led a PMO function for a major insurer's finance transformation, overseeing €8M+ in annual programme delivery across reporting redesign, process automation, and control framework rebuilds. I managed alignment across Finance, Actuarial, IT, and Operations—exactly the stakeholder complexity your role requires. Second, as interim business analyst and AMOA lead on a regulatory reporting modernisation, I translated compliance requirements into operational priorities, ensuring global consistency while supporting local business needs. Both taught me that strategy without relentless execution is just planning.

I should be direct about one thing: I've worked primarily as an independent consultant, not in a corporate management structure. I chose this partly for the variety, partly because I add most value on high-stakes, visible deliveries where my judgment and operational discipline matter most. A permanent role at Aon appeals to me now because it offers depth—staying long enough to see strategies through and build real organisational capability, not just facilitate handovers.

I'm ready to discuss how my background in insurance transformation, PMO discipline, and stakeholder management can accelerate your global central initiatives.

Best regards,
Xavier Robitaille
+33 6 64 89 09 43
xro@xavier-robitaille.com