I'm a senior consultant with 25 years in finance and insurance—exactly the operational depth SimCorp needs to lead implementations where business logic, regulatory constraints, and delivery timelines collide.

What attracts me to this role: I've spent two decades translating complex client requirements into working systems. I've redesigned financial closing processes for tier-1 insurers, led multi-stakeholder program delivery across Finance, Actuariat, and IT teams, and worked in highly regulated environments where accuracy and control design matter as much as speed. That's the core of what a Lead Business Consultant does—and it's where I deliver most value.

Concrete proof: At a major French insurance group, I led the design and rollout of a regulatory reporting transformation affecting the entire Finance operating model. That meant mapping requirements across 12 stakeholder groups, configuring workflows, documenting process changes, and training teams through go-live. The system handled €80B+ in reported assets. Similar delivery—requirements translation, configuration discipline, stakeholder alignment, training execution—is what I see in this SimCorp role.

I'm also fluent in the constraints you're solving for: I understand what "efficient client delivery across EMEA, APAC, NA" means operationally. I've worked across time zones and multiple legal entities. I know the difference between a clean implementation and a messy one, and why customization decisions matter.

One honest note: I've worked as an independent consultant for the last few years. I'm genuinely interested in a structured Lead role again—it's where I do my best work. The Warsaw-based position appeals to me for the right reasons: client impact, technical depth, and team leadership.
