Dear Telys team,

I'm writing to express my interest in your Chef de projet AMOA role. With 25 years in insurance and finance—the exact sectors where you place your strongest teams—I bring both the technical grounding and stakeholder discipline your clients need when bet-the-house projects converge business, IT, and compliance.

Here's what matters: I've spent two decades translating between CFOs and engineers. At a major insurance group, I led the AMOA stream on a €15M regulatory reporting transformation—running the full cycle from requirement capture through UAT governance. That meant animating workshops with actuaries (notoriously precise), writing functional specs that IT couldn't misinterpret, and orchestrating three parallel test campaigns without scope creep. We delivered on time, and the business actually used what we built.

I also spent five years running PMO for a financial services transformation programme: cadrage, impact analysis, change orchestration, anomaly tracking. The disciplines you list—process design, specification writing, cross-team coordination, test strategy—these are my core work, not checkbox skills.

One honest thing: I've been independent since 2018, mostly on long-term consulting mandates (18–36 months). You're building a mission-based team. That model works for me, and I'm actively re-opening my CDI options for the right structure and client mix. Telys' sector diversity (banking, insurance, energy, retail) is exactly where I perform best.

I'm fluent in English (C1), based in Île-de-France, and available to start immediately.

Let's talk about your pipeline. You'll find my full background and references at linkedin.com/in/xrobitaille.

Best,

Xavier Robitaille
