

I bring 25 years of insurance and finance expertise directly aligned with what DXC needs: someone who speaks both the language of complex program delivery and the specific operational realities of insurance transformation.

My track record is concrete. I've led PMO and AMOA mandates across major insurers, managing multi-year transformation programs that touched policy administration, claims processing, and regulatory reporting systems. On a recent engagement, I coordinated program delivery across three insurance pillars simultaneously—Finance, Actuariat, and Operations—keeping 40+ stakeholders aligned through shifting regulatory constraints and technical complexity. The discipline that matters here: clear milestone mapping, resource arbitration under pressure, and honest risk escalation before problems compound.

What makes me effective in this role: I understand insurance operating models at depth—the friction points between core systems, the weight of regulatory deadlines, how actuarial and finance functions actually work. When I plan programs, I'm not just scheduling tasks; I'm building resilience into transformation work where execution failures carry real cost. I've sat in CFO offices watching transformations derail because milestones weren't owned or risks weren't surfaced early enough. I don't let that happen.

I should be direct about one thing: I'm currently freelance through Expert Zone Advisory. I'm open to the right permanent role, and this one has it—the specificity, the scale, the sector fit. What I need clarity on is whether DXC is structured to move quickly on hiring senior talent, and what the expectation is around availability for onboarding.

I'm ready to discuss how I'd approach your first 90 days—mapping current program risks, anchoring the team on transparent reporting, and building the planning discipline that transforms complex initiatives into predictable delivery.
