I bring 25 years of finance and insurance transformation experience directly into the asset management domain. As a consulting interim manager, I've spent the last decade leading large-scale operating model redesigns, regulatory reporting overhauls, and complex program delivery—precisely the disciplines that underpin successful alternative investment transformation initiatives.

My last two significant engagements demonstrate the fit. I led a complete CFO office restructuring for a mid-cap financial services firm, consolidating three legacy reporting chains into one integrated finance function while implementing new regulatory frameworks. The project delivered 18 months early and reduced closing cycles by 35%. Before that, I managed a €120M+ IT-to-Finance alignment programme for an insurance group, sitting between the CTO and CFO to translate technical constraints into business roadmaps and vice versa. That's exactly the translator's role a Manager position demands when bridging Asset Management strategy with tech-enabled transformation.

I'm genuinely drawn to KPMG's scale and the specific focus on alternative investments. The sector's regulatory intensity and data complexity match my core competence. I understand asset service architecture, fund governance structures, and the control frameworks that matter. I also know what "large-scale" costs in practice—resource planning, team coordination across disciplines, stakeholder fatigue, scope drift—and I've built repeatable approaches to manage it.

One honest note: I've been independent for five years. I work best with clear autonomy, structured accountability, and leaders who trust execution. That said, I've mentored junior consultants throughout my career and genuinely enjoy it. I'd need clarity on how KPMG's partner model treats manager-level hiring and whether there's flexibility on scope flexibility after ramp-up.
