Dear Périclès Group,

Your Life & Wealth practice caught my attention because it sits exactly where I've spent 25 years building deep expertise: the intersection of insurance strategy, regulatory complexity, and delivery discipline.

I've spent my career in roles that mirror what you're describing—working across C-suite and operational teams to redesign insurance and finance operating models. At Expert Zone Advisory, I've led transformation missions in life insurance and wealth management for major players: refactoring claims processes, redesigning regulatory reporting architecture, and rebuilding CFO office functions under Solvency II constraints. What I've learned is that the best strategic wins happen when you combine technical depth with the ability to move organizations. That's where I add the most value.

Two concrete examples: I led a full P&L restructuring for a mid-market insurer that reduced underwriting cycle time by 40% while improving control standards—the kind of work that requires both strategic clarity and grinding through implementation detail. More recently, I managed a regulatory remediation program across three jurisdictions that involved aligning actuaries, compliance, and IT around a single truth. These aren't impressive because they're complex; they're impressive because they land, and they stick.

I'm currently structured as an independent consultant, which has given me real flexibility and kept my skills sharp. But I'm genuinely interested in the collaborative model you describe—the practice development side, working alongside a team, building something. That's different from pure project work, and it appeals to me.

I'd welcome a conversation about how this might work. I'm available for a call at your convenience.

Best regards,

Xavier Robitaille
