I bring 25 years in finance and insurance—the exact context DZ PRIVATBANK needs for a Senior Portfolio Manager role. My value isn't generic project discipline; it's the ability to translate between technical delivery teams, regulatory constraints, and executive decision-making without losing sight of either. That's the job you've described: independent arbiter with credibility across silos.

In my last two years, I've run PMO governance for a €200M+ transformation program at a major insurer—similar scale, similar stakeholder complexity. I built the reporting cadence that kept a board-level steering committee (CFO, CRO, COO) aligned with 40+ active initiatives. The discipline was methodical: risk escalation frameworks, resource conflict resolution, weekly executive dashboards. What made it work wasn't the templates; it was being trusted to call the trade-offs honestly and enforce standards without being blocked by politics.

Before that, I spent a decade in AMOA and business analysis roles—sitting exactly where you need this person to sit. I know how to read a project definition, spot the gaps that will derail execution, and flag dependencies before they become crises. I've also supported teams through audits and regulatory reviews, so governance quality isn't abstract for me—it's a real lever on enterprise risk.

One honest point: I'm currently independent, consulting through my own structure. I work well in permanent roles and have done so most of my career. I'm looking for stability and the kind of leverage you get running a real PMO function, not fractional advisory. If that matters to your hiring, it's worth discussing early.

I'd welcome a conversation about how you're scaling the portfolio function and what's broken in the current state. I'm reachable at +33 6 64 89 09 43 or xro@xavier-robitaille.com.
