Re : Financial Services Consultant (Remote)

Optimizing transaction flows and compliance guidance for a gig-economy platform means applying financial services regulation built for banks and insurers to a business model that doesn't fit either box neatly. That translation work, from formal standards to workable operational controls, is where I've spent most of my career.

At CNP Assurances, I rebuilt investment accounting production under Solvency II constraints across 350 billion euros in assets, delivering the redesign in 18 months, on schedule, with the reporting able to withstand ACPR scrutiny. On IFRS 9, I've worked ECL methodology and amortized cost categorization end to end, the kind of regulatory interpretation this role calls for when advising on compliance and financial reporting. I've also implemented SimCorp Dimension and Clearwater Analytics from design through production, which is directly relevant to building financial data analysis and reporting tools that hold up under audit.

I haven't worked on gig-economy transaction structures specifically; my transaction and risk experience comes from insurance and asset management, not platform payouts or contractor flows.

Worth a call to see if that background maps onto what your client actually needs day to day.
