Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm drawn to this role because it sits at the intersection of what I've built over 25 years: designing operations that actually work across insurance's messiest boundaries—Finance, Actuariat, IT, Risk, Compliance.

You're looking for someone who can translate strategy into process and technical design without losing either the business reality or the stakeholder alignment. That's the gap I've spent my career filling.

My last two years in consulting, I redesigned the PMO and financial close for a mid-cap insurance group (€2B+ AUM). Built the playbook, retrained 8 teams, cut close cycles by 18 days, and eliminated the quarterly firefighting that was eating everyone's time. It required convincing Finance, Risk, and Operations that the process change was actually theirs, not IT's. That's not a given in this industry.

Before that, I ran interim Finance Management and regulatory reporting for a pension fund navigator—the kind of role where one calculation error becomes a compliance issue and a reputational hit. You learn fast what clarity and discipline actually mean.

I know the transition from freelance advisory to a senior manager role is different from the traditional track. But it also means I'm hired to deliver, not to build a presence. I understand the Deloitte model—bring real experience into client engagement, not just frameworks.

I'm fluent in building operations strategy for insurance clients exactly like those in your portfolio. I'm ready for the structure and collaboration a team environment offers.

Let's talk about what's happening in your insurance and pensions practice right now, and whether my experience is the right fit.
