I bring 25 years of hands-on insurance transformation experience—the exact sector and complexity PwC needs at Senior Manager level. Unlike consultants who advise from the sidelines, I've led end-to-end core systems modernisations, managed large delivery teams through regulatory constraints, and translated between C-suite strategy and technical execution. That combination of depth is rare.

My most relevant proof: I spent three years as Interim Finance Manager and PMO lead at a top-3 European insurer, overseeing regulatory reporting redesigns and operating model refits across underwriting and claims. I managed cross-functional teams (Finance, Actuariat, IT, Operations, Risk), built governance frameworks that stuck, and delivered on tight timelines against real regulatory pressure. More recently, I've worked as an independent consultant on transformation roadmaps for insurance groups—positioning systems strategy, designing process blueprints, advising on technology enablement. I know what sustainable transformation actually looks like when you strip away the slides.

I'm also fluent in the PwC engagement model: stakeholder alignment, delivery discipline, quality gates, vendor management. I've worked alongside Big 4 teams enough to understand the rhythm.

One honest gap: I've been operating as a freelance consultant and entrepreneur for the last few years, not in a structured corporate role. A Senior Manager position at PwC is a shift back into institutional delivery. It's the right move for me now—I want the scale, the capability-building aspect, and the chance to mentor teams at a firm with real insurance depth.

I'd welcome a conversation about how my background maps to your current programme pipeline and team needs.
