Re : Strategic Project Manager (Finance) - Remote

Turning financial data into decisions that senior leadership can act on, while keeping regulatory reporting airtight, is where most finance transformation programs stall. That gap between modeling and execution is the one worth closing first.

At CNP, I rebuilt investment accounting production under Solvency II constraints: 350 billion euros in assets under management, delivered in 18 months, on time, with the sub-ledger and control framework still in use today. That work required building financial models to test feasibility and ROI before committing resources, exactly the kind of upfront discipline that keeps a budgeting or forecasting cycle from drifting. On a separate engagement, I led the migration and clean-up of legacy suspense accounts during a GL bascule, coordinating finance, actuarial, and IT teams through UAT and sign-off without disrupting the closing calendar. Both cases involved translating GAAP, IFRS, and Solvency II requirements into processes that non-specialists could run and auditors could trust.

Remote delivery is standard practice for me. My last engagement at Clearwater ran fully distributed, with the same rigor on stakeholder alignment and reporting cadence as an on-site program.

As a contractor who is a non-UK Tax resident, based overseas, IR35 does not apply to me.

Happy to walk through the CNP and migration cases in more detail on a call.
