Dear SimCorp Hiring Team,

I'm applying for the Senior Business Consultant role in your Asset Servicing Hub because the scope matches where I add real value: clarifying business problems, bridging product and operations, and unblocking clients during complex transitions.

For 25 years, I've worked in finance and insurance—first as a hands-on operator, then managing transformation programmes where ambiguity was the default. I've designed processes from scratch, mapped legacy workflows against new systems, and hosted sessions with dozens of stakeholders who saw things differently. Most recently, I've spent three years as interim finance leader and PMO consultant, which meant deciding daily what was a real business issue versus a technical solvable problem, then escalating or resolving accordingly. That discipline—knowing which conversations matter and how to frame them—is what you need for client outreach and AFT mapping work.

One concrete example: I led a regulatory reporting redesign for an insurance group where the gap wasn't the tool, it was understanding what the business actually needed versus what it thought it needed. I hosted 15+ mapping sessions with actuaries, operations, and finance, documented the discrepancies, and worked with the build team to close them. The result was on-time delivery and zero post-launch friction with stakeholders.

The honest gap: I'm currently independent, so I'd be joining a permanent structure. That's intentional on my side—I'm ready to invest in a team and grow, not to optimize between contracts.

I'm in Warsaw next month and available to discuss how I'd approach your first three client engagements.

Best,

Xavier Robitaille
