As a senior consultant with 25 years in insurance and finance transformation, I bring both the operational discipline and domain depth this Program Director role demands. I've spent my career at the intersection of technical delivery, regulatory complexity, and stakeholder alignment—exactly where large-scale software implementations live or die.

My last three years running programs at Expert Zone Advisory taught me what scales: clear governance, ruthless scope management, and the ability to translate between actuaries, CFOs, and developers without losing either precision or patience. I managed a €2.3M regulatory reporting overhaul across three European entities—on time, under budget, zero stakeholder surprises. Before that, I led the PMO function for a major insurance operating model redesign, coordinating 15+ subcontractors and three legal entities through a two-year delivery cycle.

What makes this role click for me: I understand insurance workflows at a systems level. I've lived the pain of package implementations. I know what happens when requirements aren't translated cleanly from business to IT, and I know how to catch it early. Matrix environments don't rattle me—I've navigated them dozens of times. The hybrid model and travel requirements work. Vilnius is no obstacle.

One honest point: I've worked primarily as a freelance consultant rather than in corporate hierarchy. That's actually an advantage for this kind of role—I'm accustomed to owning outcomes without relying on authority, and I bring no organizational baggage. But if you value deep internal continuity and long-term team building, that's worth discussing.

I'm ready to move into a structured Program Director position with a solid organization. Sapiens' scale and market position appeal to me exactly because they attract complex, high-stakes work.
