Dear Jobberry and Hiring Manager,

Your search for a senior project manager to lead transformation initiatives in insurance and real estate finance aligns squarely with my 25-year track record in exactly this space. I've spent my entire career at the intersection of finance, insurance operations, and digital transformation—the precise domain where your client is now scaling.

What makes me relevant: I've designed and delivered operating model overhauls for insurers facing the same growth challenges your client is experiencing. Most recently, I led a €2.3M transformation programme across three business units for a mid-market assurance firm, restructuring workflows, implementing process controls, and deploying new IT systems in tandem with stakeholder alignment. That's not advisory; it's hands-on delivery. I'm fluent in both the finance and operations languages—I speak to actuaries, CFOs, and development teams with equal clarity, which is why I rarely lose the co-construction thread even in high-friction projects.

My AI fluency is practical, not theoretical. I've assessed and scoped generative AI applications for claims processing and underwriting efficiency, which means I can help your client evaluate where AI genuinely solves a problem versus where it becomes overhead.

One honest note: I've been independent for the past three years. I'm seeking to return to a structured, mission-driven role with a team and a clear operating model—your setup appeals to me precisely because you're building one from scratch. The stability and focus of a CDI in a growth-stage firm beats the fragmentation of freelance project-hopping.

Let's talk. I'm available for a brief call this week.

Best,

Xavier Robitaille
