I'm a portfolio management leader with 25 years in insurance and finance, and I've spent the last decade orchestrating exactly this kind of work: translating business strategy into application delivery while keeping technical and business teams aligned.

What makes me useful here is that I don't separate "strategy" from "execution." At a major European insurer, I managed a Life portfolio through a regulatory transformation—70+ applications across Change and Run, €15M annual budget. The work required constant translation: actuarial requirements into technical specs, board priorities into quarterly delivery roadmaps, risk frameworks into architecture decisions. I built and led teams of Product Owners, Business Analysts, and IT leads through it. We delivered on time, stayed within budget, and the business unit renewed the mandate twice.

I know the Groupe P&V context matters here. You're in a competitive market where digital velocity is a cost of entry, not a differentiator. My role has always been to make sure the portfolio sweats the right assets—maximizing value per euro spent while keeping the lights on. I'm comfortable with messy stakeholder dynamics and budget discipline.

One honest note: I've worked as an independent consultant since 2015. I'm not looking to prove I can "work in a company" again—I just want the right problem to solve with a team that cares about outcomes more than process theater.

Let's talk about what you need to move on Life in the next 18 months. I'm in.
