Re : Hedge Fund Accounting Manager - Remote

An A-Z fund accounting model, where the manager owns both the technical delivery and the client relationship, is exactly the setup where 25 years of investment accounting and client-facing programme work pay off.

At Clearwater Analytics, I worked as senior programme director, running several parallel implementations of a Clearwater R to R SaaS solution, including for the Luxembourg-based Luxempart. That meant monthly sponsor committees at director general level and consolidated management of deliverables, milestones and resources through a dedicated tool (Monday.com): the same discipline this role asks for when a manager is the only point of contact for a client, with no separate RM function to lean on.

At CNP, I automated the projected financial production across asset classes (P&L, cash flows) and the Solvency II investment reporting: €350bn in assets, SimCorp Dimension from design to go-live, delivered in 18 months. That work sits close to NAV production and investor reporting: multi-asset accounting, reconciliations and reporting against a hard deadline, with the numbers signed off and defensible.

Team management has been part of the job throughout the career: a 20-person business unit built from scratch at Primexis, project teams of 10 to 15, 16 people managed directly at Coface. A team of 4 fits comfortably inside that experience, and mentoring junior staff, setting goals and running performance reviews is how I've always run a team.

I operate as an independent consultant today. Nevertheless, I am perfectly open to a permanent role, directly or after an initial engagement period. Remote work isn't new territory either: the Clearwater programmes above were run largely at a distance, with sponsor committees, milestone tracking and client relationships all managed remotely and no loss of rigor.

I would be happy to discuss how this experience would translate into owning a portfolio of hedge fund clients end to end.

Best regards,

Xavier Robitaille
