Dear Hiring Manager,

I bring 25 years of insurance and finance experience—the last decade focused specifically on controllership, regulatory reporting, and finance function design. This role maps directly to where I deliver the most value: building disciplined accounting frameworks under pressure, embedding controls that stick, and translating complex regulatory demands into clean operational reality.

At Generali, I led a controllership redesign covering €2.8B in gross premiums across three entities. I rebuilt the general ledger reconciliation process from scratch, implemented monthly Balance Sheet substantiation workflows, and established audit-ready control documentation. The outcome: zero material audit findings, 40% faster closing cycle, and a controllership function that ran without me after handover. I've done similar work at Munich Re and Axis—each time inheriting fragmented processes and leaving behind a team equipped to maintain standards independently.

What's relevant here: I understand reinsurance accounting mechanics (Schedule F, SRS, treaty reconciliations), I've lived through regulatory scrutiny, and I know how to make data systems and people work together. I also move fast without cutting corners—critical when you're building new functions on a 12-month timeline.

One honest point: I'm currently self-employed through my consulting practice. I'm actively seeking full-time roles where I can anchor for the medium term and build something lasting. This contract interests me precisely because the scope (establishing controllership, embedding controls, supporting audit) suggests real structural impact, not firefighting.

I'm available to start immediately and comfortable with the London hybrid model. Happy to discuss how we'd make this transition work.

Best regards,

Xavier Robitaille
