I bring 25 years in insurance and finance transformation—exactly the mix this role needs. I've spent the last decade as an interim PMO lead and finance consultant, handling the precise work your job description outlines: governance frameworks, portfolio-level reporting, value tracking against business cases, and hands-on programme delivery under pressure.

Most recently, I led PMO setup for a major insurer's regulatory reporting transformation—€8M budget, 18-month timeline, 40+ workstreams across Finance, Actuariat, and IT. Built the governance layer from scratch: steering committee cadence, RAG reporting, dependency mapping, benefit tracking. Same 50/50 split you're describing: half deep PMO control work, half sitting in executive forums translating technical reality into board language. Delivered on time, within budget, value realised ahead of plan.

Before that, I rebuilt a P&L close process for another London-based insurer—compressed 8 days to 3, created portfolio cost allocation tooling, trained a small team to own it sustainably. The work felt invisible to most people, which meant it was working.

I'm based in France but fully mobile. London work is familiar terrain—I've done multiple stints there and I speak the operational language of UK financial services. I understand the Arch mindset around governance and measurement; that's where I've built most of my credibility.

One real thing: I work best as an interim or fixed-term lead, not permanent employment. If that's a potential issue, worth surfacing early. If it's workable—especially if you're looking to build capability and then transition to an internal team—I'm genuinely interested in exploring this.

Happy to talk through how my last two missions map to your portfolio and programme needs.
