I'm a finance and insurance consultant with 25 years in the sector—I've spent that time at the intersection of regulatory compliance, operational delivery, and stakeholder alignment where most transformations actually break down.

What I do well: I run complex interim finance mandates (CFO office, regulatory reporting, process redesign) where the stakes are high and the moving parts numerous. I've led PMO on multi-year programmes where discipline on governance prevented the typical 6-month slide. I speak both the language of finance and IT, which matters when you're redesigning controls or closing procedures and both sides need to move together.

Here's concrete: I managed a full operating model redesign for an insurance group—rebuilt their monthly closing from 8 days to 3, rewired the actuarial-finance handoff, and installed controls that actually stuck because operations understood them. Another mandate: led the AMOA for a regulatory reporting transformation across three entities; we landed on time and within tolerance because we treated stakeholder alignment as technical work, not soft skills.

I work best on interim or fixed-term missions where there's real friction to solve and visibility matters—I'm not looking for a permanent role. That's a gap to acknowledge upfront: if you need someone embedded full-time over years, I'm probably not the fit. But if you need someone to land, diagnose quickly, and deliver with discipline while keeping your CFO and CRO in sync, that's where I add clear value.
