Re : Strategic Project Manager (Finance) - Remote

Turning financial data into decisions senior leadership can act on, while a system migration runs in parallel and regulatory reporting can't slip, is a specific kind of project to manage.

That's the intersection I've worked in throughout my career in insurance and finance. On one investment accounting project, I designed the IFRS 9 framework: the ECL methodology, amortized cost treatment, and asset categorization rules, then carried it into a SimCorp Dimension implementation from design through production cutover. The financial models built for that project caught portfolio treatment issues before they reached the regulator.

On another engagement, I led a Clearwater Analytics implementation covering CW CORE, OMS, and LPx, coordinating middle and back office teams and Bloomberg data feeds to get the new platform into production without breaking existing reporting.

I've also redesigned month-end closing processes: apurement of suspense accounts, fast-close controls, reconciliations, and VBA-built accounting entries to cut manual rework across finance teams, directly the kind of process optimization this role calls for.

My background is insurance and finance, not the technology sector this employer operates in. The financial infrastructure problems are the same ones I've spent 25 years solving.

Worth a call to see where the overlap is strongest?
